Love, World's One Need Any Man Can Be Happy With If; No Man Can Be Happy Without It. By Elin Wheeter Willeax.

HERE is only one need in the I world The need to love our neighbors as ourselves.

To do as we would be done by.

The need to understand that the human race is one body; and that when we do anything which alarms or harts one individual, we harm all inlividuals, ourselves included.

Just as we harm the body, when we

When we stop and think about the world, the whole process of life becomes pitiful.

Each, being born upon the earth, is striving for bappiners, from the cradle to the grave, in his own way.

According to his light, he is doing the best be can.

He does not know it, but the only satisfaying things which he can get out of life are peace of mind, self-respect and the love of his fellowmen. Nothing he can obtain without these things, nothing he can achieve or become, is of any real value.

No man can be happy without those three blessings. Any man can be happy with them.

Even though he is saddened by the serrow he sees about him; the sorrow which results from attriving after more than we need; after what does not belong to us, after the possessions of others.

There would be no war; no industrial problems; no prisons; no poor

There would be no war: no industrial problems: no prisons; no poor beuses; no white slaves; no sex sins; if men and women all set forth early in life on that threefold quest-for peace of mind, for self-respect, for the love of their fellowmen.

That is all any soul is seeking; that is all any soul is seeking; that is all there is in life worth living for.

Yet is there war and strict and ba-
